HONGHONG, MARCH 25TH, 1875.

The adventurous traveller into regions before practically unknown is a true pioneer. He breaks new ground, gleans fresh and more accurate information, and not infrequently clears up many popular fallacies concerning the country he has visited. In bygone times the exploits and journeys of the bond fide traveller were the subjects of far livelier interest and far greater wonder than they are in the present day. Travelling |- Japan Herald. bas been made so much easier of accomplishment, distance has been almost annihilated by steam, that the man who has journeyed round the globe is no longer regarded as a prodigy, and only those who penetrate into wilds heretofore believed to be inaccessible. or push their way into domains where the stranger is regarded with scant favour and shown little courtesy, are considered worthy. of being lionised. The travels of Bauca in Abyssinia do not now evoke incredulity or surprise; they have long since been eclipsed by other visitors to that country. The narrative of the voyages of Captain Coon is now seldom read, though his memory is still justly honoured. Even the wanderings of the renowned LIVINGSTONE in that most wondrous continent of Africa, and the discoveries he has made there, are not without rivals. Speke and GRANT have done good service in opening up that great unknown country, and in all probability STANLEY will yet contribute some important supplemental particulars to the geographical facts the great Livingsrone brought to light.

Just as the age of chivalry is past, with all the glamour of its romance and pageantry. so the wonder-teeming stories of pilgrims i remote and semi-civilized lands have been stripped of much that was marvellous and strange by the nearer contact with and more intimate knowledge of them now possessed. The telegraph and the steamer find their way. to earth's remotest bounds, and carry to and | coolie 25 cents. fro the news, now so prosaic, of all events. occurring. But though divested of much of his ancient importance, as the retailer of astounding intelligence, the voyageur still holds a deservedly high position in public esteem, and still attracts great attention whenever he has anything really new and useful to add to the public stores of geographic or historic lore. In fact a higher standing is really assigned to them, for the explorers of unfrequented tracts are now allowed a place among the band of discoverers who occupy the van in the great march of human progreen. David Livindstone's remains were deposited in the most honoured sanctuary of his country amidst the universal regrets of the nation. It is right that such a position should be assigned to them. The known and densely peopled lands are constantly requiring fresh outlets for their surplus population. Where places get too thickly peopled, as in Malta, destitution and vice advance pari passu, and the miserable inhabitante sink into despor misery and degradation with every succeeding generation. The human race is increasing in almost every pendent of ontward fortune,

Hence becomes imperative that new homes should be found for some, and it is prudent to encourage all efforts in the direction of the exploration of that vast island continent, Australia, has been heroically carried out, But large tracts of rich land have been found, and one day Australia will be the home of many millions of industrious and thriving people. His Highness as I am informed, has repeatedly, within the last few days, expressed to personal friends, as well as to members of the Reichatag, his resolve to reign his high offices on his 60th birthday—the 1st of April next. He has said that this determination of his is no new one, or prompted by any particular politica condition, but a resolve adopted by him long ago, and from which he entertains no intention of departing; that at the ugo eisty he considers bimeelf justified laying down his public burthens, in order to devote the rest of his life to his family; that be in never well save at Varzin, and always ill at Berlin in particular, the climatic and sanitary conditions of which city are peculiarly injurious to his benith; and that rest, regular babits, wholesome air, and physical exercise are become absolute necessities to him, to forego which any longer would be highly imprudent on his part. Not only has Prince Blamark's yearning for repose, after twenty stormy years of political activity, prompted him to contemplate retirement into private life, but other and very morning, destitute, exhausted, and suffering he had fulfitled his obligations, and that he had powerful influences have been brought to bear daughter, who are fundly attached to him, have enffered a constant agony of terror, lest his life

It is, moreover, unquestionably the fact that his nerve is staken to an alarming extent. Let us not forget that be receives handreds of threatening letters every week, many of which contain menaces of the most revolting description; that the police authorities have impressed upon him the urgent peocessity of observing all sorts of irksome precautions at home and abroad, besides exeroising a surveillance upon his person which must be all but intolerable to a man of his naturally intrepid and reckless character. Three detectives watch his house day and night, aided by the street police, and when he goes outside his door, which is a rare occurrence, follow him, and "keep their eye upon him." He has been advised not to drive out in an open carriage, us was his wont for many years past, so he only uses a close estringe, and sits well back in He has been implored not to ride in the Thier garien or streets, so he takes equestrian exerone daily for an hour or so in the huge garden of the Ministerium des Aenssern. All this may be very necessary, in common prodence, considering the danger his life is exposed to at the hands of furious fanatice and frantic zealota; but it is borribly annoying, veratious, and depressing. Suph conditions of existence must in time undermine the afoutest courage and wenr out the boldest temper. It is deplorable that a man who, only two years ago, could not show himself without becoming the object of a popular ovation, and who is still absolutely worshipped-us far as the German nature is capable of worship-by millions of his fellow-countrymen, should have been worried and budgered until he searcely dare cross bis threshold lest the assassin's knife or bullet should be aimed at his heart. When Prince Bismarok List year haseverated that he was the worst-hated man in Europe, he knew very wel what he was saying; but the most cruel part of the ordel truth he then gave atterance to is the painful fact that he is more bitterly and danveronaly hated by Germans, his own compatriots, than be is by Frenchmen, his and bis country's evern enemies. It is more than probable that many of the enraged Ultramontaniate entertain the hope of driving him from power to sheer intimidation. olerical party is always well informed with respect to what goes on in its enemies camps and it is quite aware that a man who has been twice shot at, and had two such terribly parrow escapes of death by assumination as lina Prince towing the big halk behind her to Plymonth cottages which were destroyed in order that the Biamurck, is, in all bumun probability, peenliarly anaceptible to the effects producible upon the nerves by anonymous threats. AUSTRIAN OPINION ON ENGLISH. EASTERN POLICY.

A remarkable article on the relations between Austria and England in regard to Hastern affairs is published by the Fremdenblatt of Vienna. Referring to some remarks made in a London puper about the policy of Austria in the Podgoritza affair, the writer, observes that if it he asked whether Austria has abandoned England or England Austria, there can be but one asswer -that the divergence in the Eastern policy of the two parties is the fault of England alone. It was not Austria who gave up the assistance and the valuable support of England at Constantinople; but England, though abe has an ambassador and a brilliant and numerous diplomatic staff there, was simply not to be not at when her co-operation was required in important questions. . . The ambassador himself was at his post, and was usually as amiable as an Englishman can be, but he was not to be persunded to say a decisive word or do a decisive not. The principles of the Manchester school. which have become predominant in the mothertion-bave in the course of years paralyzed the of the remesentatives of England at Constanright side, and even interfered in matters which should not have occurred his attention at the Foreign Office, his successors and their agents abroad have fallen into the other extreme; in Constantinople especially, England, to the despair of her friends, now does not too little, but absolutely nothing. This passive attitude of England, then. has naturally contributed to convince Austria of the necessity of changing her policy in the East. We saw ourselves, if not abandoned, at east treated with indifference by our 'natural ally ; and we were obliged to look for a substitute. Englishmen seem provoked because we have found one-because we have opened relations with St. Petersburg by way of Berlin: but we have learned from their own mistesman to place our interests above those of other Powers. Great Britain has never known any other policy than an English one, and she cannot find fault with us for inaugurating an Austrian policy."

AMERICAN GRASSHOPPERS. Although farming may in some cases more mickly laid on to fortune in the United States than in England, it is undoubtedly exposed to perils unknown to the Buitish agriculturist. Putting aside bush fires, droughts, and tornadoes as trifles scarcely worth speaking about, the depredations of insects are curried so extensively as to bring vividly before the mind what the Egyptians must have endured from the plague of locasts. In Hagland the grassbopper is eatcemed rather a cheerful sort of insect, being more or less distantly connected with the orioket that is generally found chirping blithely by the bearth in pathetic romance, if not in real life. But in America the case seems otherwise. There the grasshopper becomes a " foarful wild fow! " bent on proving that the Yankeeland can " lick creation " even in so small a matter us its insects. At the present time no less than forty thousand men, women and children in Kausas, and Nebraska are said to be in danger of athreation owing to the devastations of these long-legged peats. Rising above the horizon in a dense cloud, their appearance is almost regarded as a visitation of Providence which it would be useless to resist. On a little stand, three caps, each alightly concave and have ing an under-rest or foot about half an inch high, are set, one upon another, like a pagoda. The stand with this three-storied arrangement is handed to the bride. Holding it in both hands while the sake is poured into it by the male butterfly, the bride lifts the cup, sips from it three times, and the tower of cups is then passed to the bridegroom and refilled. He likewise drinks three times, and puts the empty oup under the third. The bride again sips thrice from the upper cup. The groom does the came, and places the empty our beneath the second. Again the bride sips three times, and the bridegroum does the same, and they are man and wife: they are married. WAS SHAKESPEARE IN SCOTTAND! Sir John Sinclair, in his statistical account, when referring to the local traditions respecting Macbeth's castle at Dunsingan, infers from their coincidence with the drama that Shakespeare, "in his capacity of actor, travelled in Scotland in 1599, and collected on the spot materials for the exercise of his imagination." A subsequent writer objects that Shakespeare could not have heard the country people pronounce the word Dunsinnan, as they always put the accent on the second syllable, whereas he throws it on the last. It is true that he does so frequently, but not always, as witness the lines-"Macboth shall never vanquish'd be until Great Birman wood to high Dunsinnan hill.

Shall pome against him." Mr. Charles Knight argues strongly in favour of the probability of Shakespeare having been in Scotland. He contends that the company which James patronised in Scotland and the manager of which is there recognised as "His Majesty's Comedian," was the same Aggregate Capital to which he granted the letters patent in 1603. If so, Shakespeare was a leading member of it as well in 1601 as in 1603, and could not be spared when an emedition was undertaken to Scotland. Being also by this time a poot of distinction.
